Pixie Dust

Origin Story: A friend from my home planet brought me pixie dust and a Pinkleberry flower. They told me that they were both magical resources from different planets and that I should find a way to make them useful in Eipra. I thought adding pixie dust to a necklace and putting the flower in a locket would make sure it contained all of its healing powers. I knew the finished product would help me with good dreams for quite a while, I decided to name it 'Sweet Pea' after my favorite flower.

Appearance: Golden sparkling necklace with a clear locket that contains a pink flower. The clear locket is in the shape of a circle and is intended to keep the flower safe and its scent secured.

● Breezy scent

When smelled it makes one happy and joyous through the night. It can reach 5 people at a time.

◆ Sleep Chain

The stronger the negative emotions the stronger the necklace is, it can reach 20 people and put them to sleep.

★ Graceful blooming

When in dire need the flower will grow larger and the scent will be unavoidable. The flower will grow up to 8 feet and wrap its petals around the being or beings.

Chapter One: Welcome.

La Sandra, 5/26/09

A lot of my days are the same routine with different dreams. On my home planet, Eipra, my job is to help people with their dreams. I was formed from the core of my home planet and assigned to make our creatures enjoy having dreams. I stay at a place called Malu which is a temple that beings can visit me at when they're having bad dreams or feeling down. I don't do this dream work alone, there are other creatures that help me as well. The main two are Dream Catchers and Poyo. We all have the same goal but accomplish it differently. Dream Catchers are mostly found at night, they glow a dim warm light to scare off any bad dreams that are near or that might be in creation. Poyo are found during the day, they are tall and thin brightly glowing creatures who play music for those around them to radiate good feelings that turn into good dreams.

My species is called Polka, there is only one Polka on Eipra and it's me. You can find me at all times of the day, I am there to talk and listen to you, to make a connection. Unlike Dream Catchers and Poyo, I can control dreams. I decide what a creature dreams about, they do their best to give them a higher possibility to have a good dream. Everyone around me is like family.

Because of the environment I was born into I don't feel too many negative emotions, I have love for anything and everything. Our planet is very peaceful so we don't have any other surrounding planets that would want to cause us harm. A lot of beings would assume my life is hard because I have to listen to others all the time and constantly worry about others. But actually my life is pretty enjoyable, creatures on this planet solve problems fast and easy. So when it comes down to talking about their problems, they don't have many bad things to say.

Chapter Two: My Lovely Sweetpea

My friend Zaeinra explores many other planets and takes some of the special minerals from the planets. When he comes back to Eipra he gives me the minerals that he thinks could benefit me.

Today he brought me Pixie Dust from the planet Pixie Hollow and he brought me a Pinkleberry from the Land of The Sweetlings. He told me that Pixie Dust helps the fairies from Pixie Hollow keep and contain their powers. Then he told me that Pinkleberry is a flower that's scent is used to heal and make beings feel positive. When he told me this I knew I could do something with both of these elements to help me with giving beings good dreams. I thought for a bit on how I could go about combining them into something advanced and practical. Then suddenly I remembered when I need to make paper for scripture I add flower petals and other fun things into the mixture to make it cuter. But I would want to make something I can carry around easily and that isn't so fragile. It hit me that I could make a locket necklace covered in pixie dust and place the Pinkleberry flower inside the locket so I can use it when necessary. I got to work right away making my necklace. It didn't take me that long to make the necklace because I have many gold necklace chains laying around and I have many different lockets. I like to collect a lot of jewelry and trinkets. Once I finished making my necklace I had to start brainstorming names for my new magical necklace. Since the necklace is mostly powered from a flower I wanted to name it after a flower with a meaning similar to how I thought of the necklace's abilities. Then it came to me, one of my favorite flowers from Eipra. A sweetpea. They are one of my all time favorite flowers. Sweetpea has multiple different meanings, the ones I chose to identify the necklace with was blissful pleasure and a goodbye. My home planet gives others blissfulness, awake or asleep. The purpose of my existence and the existence of this necklace is to take away bad dreams, to say goodbye.

Chapter Two: My Lovely Sweatpea

As I awakened from a pleasant sleep I heard panic outside of my temple. Poyo's knocked on my door and quickly came in. They told me that a nightmare outbreak began throughout many different planet areas. There was a nightmare patch forming near our planet and surrounding planets. It hadn't touched us yet but it formed around one of our neighboring planets. The nightmare's job is to destroy everyone's dreams. I grew very concerned as they told me more and more. Close planets were asking what we should do about the nightmare. I immediately said that we should help the affected planet. I told our companions that just because we aren't affected doesn't mean that we shouldn't help those who are. But I knew we had to play this smart, we couldn't just jump into this. We need to learn more about this nightmare chaos because if we go in knowing nothing we might just hurt more than help. I wasn't too sure about what we were dealing with, but I soon found out that there were many more planets affected and that the nightmare was spreading fast.

Chapter Three : The awakening

The day was coming to an end as everyone calmed down. All the creatures headed home and drifted off to sleep. Slowly trying to forget the disaster that just unraveled. As I headed back to the Malu I got a message that read, “The nightmare virus changes the wildlife and the whole planet. It makes things different, it makes things evil. Everyone please be safe and protect your planet”. I quickly ran back to the Malu rushing inside and taking out all of my writing materials and scripture paper. I needed to think of a plan, I needed to protect our beautiful home. I didn’t care about helping anyone at that moment. I needed to help us. I messaged all of the surrounding planets to find out what they want to do with this nightmare. They all started sending long messages on what they think we should do. In the end we all agreed to meet up the next day and discuss with each other. I took a deep breath and tried to calm myself down. I need rest so I can think clearly and be stronger for everyone. I carefully lit some sleeping smoke and turned off the lights. As I laid down in my bed, carefully drifting off to sleep with worry etched deep in my heart, I knew there would be an answer when I awoke. I didn’t know if it was good or bad but I could feel an answer to this nightmare slowly developing all around me.

5:26 A.M. my body jerked up, my eyes shot open. I felt panicked. I quickly looked around the Malu trying to find the source of this disgustingly negative feeling. I got up and grabbed a bag and stuffed it with scripture paper, 2 writing flowers, a time telling machine, and my conversation device. I made sure my Sweetpea was around my neck and hastily put my silk scarf around my shoulders. None of the Del Lans or Tiki’s were up that I knew of, they’re the only species that don’t have powers and yet they take up almost all of the population. But they are the ones we protect, the ones we give good dreams to. As I cautiously opened the doors of my Malu I was greeted with darkness.

Chapter Three : The awakening

Not the beautiful resting darkness of the night, but an evil suffocating darkness. I walked further outside to figure out why the night looked so different. I looked up at the moon, there were cracks. Our moon was being taken over by some sort of magical leach sucking evilness. My blood ran cold. It's as if whatever this was had been waiting for someone to notice it. Because as soon as I took in the new atmosphere, strong tides formed. The tides were dark, thick, gloomy. I ran and called out with all my might.

“Wake up. Take your belongings, loved ones, and run”, I ran as fast as I could, repeating myself over and over again.

That's when I saw it. The fear formed all around the Del Lans, Tiki's, Poyo's, and Dream Catchers as they ran with little belongings and all their loved ones. I scanned the area, felt everywhere, there was no creature that wasn't running. Our planet's core guided them all to a place that was far from the tides. I stood there as memories flashed through my mind. Back when I was first formed by our planet.

~It's warm glowing light wrapped around my body, the plants' cool vines and leaves wrapped around my arms and legs, lifting me up. It was truly blissful. ~

But quickly snapping out of my memories there was a sensation all around my body, I was being lifted up into the air. Then I got flung outside of my planet feeling the harsh winds against my body. I tried to look around to see what was happening to the other creatures. I could see some other creatures also being flung.

Chapter Four : Blindsighted awareness

I awoke somewhere foreign. The sun was setting & I was in a field of some kind, there was a lot of grass and colorful flowers. I tried to sit up but my whole body was in deep pain.

“I must’ve landed here after I was ejected from Eipra.” I said softly to myself.

I tried to think about what happened to Eipra and all the others but there was a painful stinging sensation that would come along when I thought too hard. I slowly pressed my hands around my body checking if I still had my bag and my scarf. Somehow they were still on my body. The pressure of the air must’ve stuck them to me. Even though this place felt unusual it still felt nice. The breeze in the air, the just right warmness, it felt like Eipra.

In this grassy field there were a lot of roses and tulips. I knew at that moment I was on Earth. I grew up studying all kinds of plants so I knew which planets had which plants. Earth is a beautiful planet, not somewhere I would choose to live, especially with all the people here. But still I admire Earth. It’s so tough but so delicate at the same time, one more degree one less degree and it would be gone, while at the same time going through earthquakes and planet shattering events and still standing strong. While I trail off into the admiration for Earth I start to drift off, all this thinking is making me tired.

Boom. A loud crashing sound woke me up from my sleep. I looked around to see darkness, not a scary kind but a setting kind. I tried to look around to find the source of the noise without moving my body too much. I couldn’t find anything out of the ordinary that would make a loud sound like that. I slowly reached down to my bag and pulled out my messaging device. I opened it to suddenly be flooded with messages saying the nightmare is growing in size by the day.

Chapter Four : Blindsighted awareness

They listed all the planets that were caught in it and there it was, Eipra. I sent a long message to everyone that read, “Hello everyone it’s La Sandra, the nightmare did not come to my planet as peacefully as others. It was causing chaos, destruction, fear. My planet ejected me and the others from my planet to different places I assume. I have woken up on Earth. I’m not sure what the plan is but we must think of one fast. If any of you can please find out more about my planet and other residents' well -being.” I shook as I typed. I couldn’t believe that this was happening to me and my beautiful planet.

As the sun rose, its warmth radiating on my skin, I felt it charging me back up. My body still sore slowly regained a little ounce of strength. At least enough strength to explore and figure out my surroundings. As I got up I felt like a baby deer first learning to walk. I was stumbling and struggling to do a task I never thought too much about. At a time like this I wish I had healing powers or something to heal me fast. The pain was very strong but I still pushed through and started walking through the field. I worried if a person would find me, I don’t look like an average human at all. Out of anyone why did it have to be me who was sent to a planet that isn’t aware of life outside their planet? But I’d rather have to go through this than have this misfortune be put on anyone else.

Chapter Five: We will be together tomorrow.

I tried to grasp the reality of this situation and take in my surroundings. But it all was too much. Too many new changes, too many questions that I didn't have the answer to, too many things to deal with. My mind was all scrambled and I needed to find a way to put it back together again. This all felt like a wretched terrorizing dream. The way I moved and the way I acted on things all felt surreal and out of body. I guess I never really thought about how it felt having a long detailed dream. I've always heard from the Del Lan's and Tiki's how their long dreams felt and how my work operated when sleeping. I've had many dreams before, amazing ones. I've lived wonderful dreams, ones that hurt to wake up from.

~ The sun gently kissed and caressed my body, putting my nerves at ease. I look to the side and see him. We lay on the soft grass that housed many different insects and animals. His hand gently settled on my stomach as we lay and thought of nothing. I remember the long summer days we spent together, him helping me when needed, listening and talking to each other from night till dawn. Even in the silent moments I felt heard, I felt peace. Then one day I woke up.~

Chapter Five: We will be together tomorrow.

Everything feels fuzzy, when I look at anything I have a feeling I won't remember any of this. I see a tree, a Willow Tree to be exact. I must have walked far because I'm now in a forest area. But I don't seem to remember how I got here, maybe it's best to not think about it much. I go under the willow and sit down on a fairly large piece of moss, its softness melting down any tense feeling I've had being here. I gently run my fingers through my hair and look at the loose wave that forms at the end. Then I analyze my nails, outfit, and my bag. I like to fully make sure I know what's going on around me. I reach my hand in my bag and pull out my scripture paper and writing material. I begin to sign my name and the date.

'La Sandra, 5/26/09'.

I hope if I do perish or disappear someone or something will find this and be smart about it. I wish to not be forgotten nor the lives of my companions.

I write endlessly so the one who finds the scripture understands fully. I can already feel my hands and body giving out. I give myself a quick break and check my messaging device. All the other planets are saying that they will make sure to come and save any remaining creatures on the affected planets. I pray that everyone from Eipra is safe and doing well. I begin to feel very tired and before I know it, I'm falling asleep.

Chapter Six: A forever sleep.

As I awaken the next day I feel a sense of hope. During the night I dreamt of beautiful things, a lovely future. I hope I am saved soon and able to give all the residents of Eipra the good dreams they deserve. I long to be back on my planet again, just to feel its freshness one last time. No place could ever compare to Eipra, I'm sure of it.

I gently run my fingers across my Sweetpea, feeling its smoothness brings me comfort.

~ The warm silky sand I lay on this black sand beach makes me feel so warm. It's my birthday, I just turned 9 and even though nothing here seems familiar, it all feels nostalgic. I feel fuzzy being here knowing that this an experience I will look back to continuously.~

For some reason I'm feeling tired once again. Which is confusing because I just woke up not too long ago. But still even with this tired feeling I must go on for me, for Eipra. So with that thought in mind I must get up and move. I also fear if I die here a small child may find me and it will send everyone here down a rabbit hole. I'm glad that I chose to sit on that piece of moss because I know I would feel very sore if I didn't. As I stand up I see a black bug crawling up the tree I was just resting on. More appear on the tree absorbing it like quick sand. A truly disturbing sight to see. But as I walked on through the forest, it felt as if I was on a beach. I could hear the sound of the water moving in a river nearby and the ground beneath me felt so light.

I can't seem to remember much of my day after that but all I know is that now I'm here deep in the forest. Today exhausted me and it feels as if my memory is fading. I think I will let myself fall asleep and once I wake up in the morning I will tell more of my story. To whomever is reading this goodnight and if our adventure continues, I'll talk to you in the morning.
